Abstract:

Therapeutic strategies for rectal bleeding are generally ignored and include medical, endoscopic, and hyperbaric oxygen treatments. Most cases of radiation-induced bleeding are mild and self-limiting, and treatment is normally not indicated. In cases of clinically significant bleeding (i.e. anaemia), medical therapies, including stool softeners, sucralfate enemas, and metronidazole, should be considered as first-line treatment options. In cases of failure, endoscopic therapy, mainly represented by argon plasma coagulation and hyperbaric oxygen treatments, are valid and complementary second-line treatment strategies. In traditional Chinese medicine rectal bleeding can be caused by the formation of Heat retention due to energy deficiencies. Purpose; the purpose of this study is to demonstrate that rectal bleeding has an energy deficiency and Heat retention as a cause and the corrections of these energies imbalances and replenishing the lack of energy could be one of the strategies to improve the patient's condition. Methods: through one case report of a 72-year-old male patient, diabetic, who had a malignant tumour in his prostate in 2018 and after the treatment of this disease, he was advised to do radiotherapy. After this treatment with radiotherapy, the patient begins to lose blood every time he goes to the bathroom to poop, and usually he loses many blood that make the water of the toilet very red because the blood he loses. After recommendation of a friend of him, he search for acupuncture treatment as an option for his problem. He received advice to avoid some kinds of foods, and performed acupuncture and auricular acupuncture with apex ear bloodletting and the doctor did the chakras energy measurement showing that all his chakras was completely depleted in energy, with the exception of the seventh chakra that was normal. He began to take medications to replenish the energy with homeopathies according to the theory created by the author entitled Constitutional Homeopathy of the Five elements based on traditional Chinese Medicine, created by the author, and crystal based medications. Results: With the treatment done, the patient improved from this condition and at this moment, is not losing blood anymore when he poop in the toilet. Conclusion: The conclusion of this study is that radiation rectal bleeding has an energy imbalance as the cause and the correction and treatment of these lack of energy and replenishment of the chakras energy with highly diluted medications are very important tools to treat this condition in the root of the problem and not just the symptoms.
